WHY RIDD?

The objective of this manual is to help equip you with the necessary skills and knowledge to maximize your time here with us at RIDD. We're grateful to have you and want you to have nothing but the best experience.

RIDD is built by YOU. By developing your sales skills and arming yourself with the information outlined in this manual, not only are you contributing to the overall success of the organization but you're also taking massive steps toward taking ownership of your life as well.

Study and refer back to this manual often. Learn to make the most of the resources available to you. By understanding the principles outlined in this manual, we guarantee you'll have a more successful knocking season. Become dedicated to mastering the sales process and RIDD will not only help you unlock your potential as a sales professional, but RIDD will also open new doors and opportunities for your life that very few other occupations can offer you.

Here at RIDD, we're about people, not numbers. As you develop the necessary sales skills to be successful with this job, you'll be able to translate those skills into your everyday life as well. Whether you realize it or not, you're constantly selling yourself. Maybe it's for your next job promotion, getting accepted into a college program, or convincing the person you've been going out with to date you. Whatever it may be, we want to help you accomplish your goals in any capacity that we can while you're here.

We also want you to build and grow with us. We're a successful, growing company and you have the opportunity to be an integral part of that growth! With that being said, let's start working on your pitch!

INTRO

First impressions can be accurately made within 1/10th of a second.¹

The way you introduce yourself is critical to getting off to the right start with customers.

The introduction can be broken up into 4 critical parts that you must mention early on in your pitch:

- 1. Who You Are
- 2. Who You're With
- 3. What You're Doing
- 4. Why It Matters

Here is an example of the pitch separated into those 4 segments:

1. Who You Are

"Hey, how are ya? Good, my name is (your name)."

2. Who You're With

"I'm the route manager with RIDD."

3. What You're Doing

"Have you seen our trucks in the area the past couple of days? Awesome, we take care of (customer's names we take care of) and (# of homes we service) in the neighborhood. It's mostly been for the ants, spiders, and wasps, just the normal bugs everyone gets this time of year."

4. Why It Matters

"Anyways, the reason I'm swinging by is while I'm out here I'm getting EVERYONE done for over half off cause I have some spots I need to fill. Do you have someone taking care of the bugs for you or not yet? Cool, I'll just show you what we're up to real fast..."

Intro Tips

1 Don't Stray Far From the Pitch

If you aren't getting through your intro much, you may feel like you need to switch up what you are saying. Don't. Little tweaks here and there might be beneficial based on your neighborhood situation. For example, you might be knocking in a neighborhood where it's all contracted out by the same pest control company or maybe another sales representative from another company recently knocked your area. In these cases, you may need to slightly adjust your intro to address that you're aware of it before the customer turns it into an objection. Other than that, the issue is most likely going to be your non-verbals or para-verbals. Jump down to the "Sales Communication" section of the manual for potential issues it could possibly be.

2 Mitigate Objections

In areas that have been recently knocked, mention early on in your pitch that you aren't the "flyer guy/girl." Additionally, find out what industry was knocking in your neighborhood. For example, if it was solar, mention early on "Hey I'm (your name) with RIDD. Don't worry, I'm not the solar guy/girl. Have you seen our trucks in the area?" The best sales reps mitigate objections by acknowledging them before they're ever brought up.

3 Qualify Decision Makers

On top of mitigating objections by acknowledging them, qualify your decision makers. You don't want to waste your time with people that can't purchase the service. Ask qualifying questions such as "Now you're the one that would handle the pest control for the home, right?" or "Okay and it sounds like you're the boss when it comes to the pest control?" Make sure you get a firm yes or no early on to avoid wasting your time. If you're speaking with someone that is a non-decision maker, set that home as a call-back and return at a better time when a decision maker is home.

4 Bandwagon Customers

Bandwagoning can be effective but it can also devalue your pitch as well if not used properly. In an area with a lot of customers, bandwagon often. If you're in a market that gets a lot of companies that knock doors, you may need to be a little quicker in your intro so bandwagoning may not be as effective. You can also bandwagon if there's a current customer really close to the home you're knocking on. Just be cautious when bandwagoning. It can come off as salesy. Additionally, never bandwagon someone in your area that you spoke with but hasn't officially signed up yet, it could come back to hurt you.

5 Find Hot Buttons

Find the main bugs that people are dealing with in the area. Start bringing up the common pest problems your customers mention during your intro because it's likely that other people in the area will also be dealing with those same issues! This is called a hot button.

6 Bring Energy

Sales is a transfer of energy! People enjoy talking to happy people! Lots of sales reps will even force themselves to fake a little smile as the customer is opening up the door to make a strong first impression. Think of something you are passionate about. Maybe it's a sport, gaming, or any other hobby you might enjoy. You need to show that same level of energy for our service as you have for that hobby!

7 Build Rapport Naturally

Don't try to build rapport in the intro unnaturally. Don't mention how cool their dog is or that you like their car in the driveway right off the bat. Bring it up as small talk as you go throughout your process. Build relationships naturally!

By nailing down the intro, you're teeing yourself up to build tons of value in the service and you are giving yourself the best opportunity to close the deal!

SERVICE

Explaining the service adequately is crucial for customers to understand it's value. There are generally 3 main features you should always mention:

1. The Eaves

2. The Base

3. The Yard

The way you roll each part of the service out can broken up into 5 important principles that you can follow to help you gauge and build a customer's buying temperature. Let's go through the 5 parts and then break them down:

1. Ask Generic Questions

2. Build A Problem

3. Solve The Problem

4. Explain The Benefit

5. Get Agreement

3 Main Features

The Eaves

"The first thing I need to take care of is up in the eaves. You know how everyone occasionally gets spiders and wasps up there? Those nests just continue to grow if unaddressed. What I need to do is come out with a webster pole, it extends up to 30 feet. It's like a glorified toothbrush. I'll sweep and treat all of your eaves on both the first and second levels of your home. Why this is important is it obviously makes the house look really nice, but it also prevents those colonies from creeping up into the attic through your vents and prevents them from eventually trickling down into the home. Does that make sense?"

Transition: "My favorite part of the service is here at the base of the home."

The Base

"You know how you'll get little cracks and crevices around the foundation over time? Bugs will use these as freeways to get in and out of the home so what I need to do for you is come out and do a 3-foot by 3-foot power spray around the base of your home. Why this is important is I'm going to be able to flush those bugs out of the wall voids of your home so you don't see anything on the inside. Does that make sense how I can keep the bugs out of the home for you?"

Transition: "The reason (customer's name in the neighborhood) gave us a shot is what we are doing for them out here in the yard."

The Yard

"That's really where all your bugs come from, right? The colonies will eventually try to find their way into the home if I don't take care of it for you so what I do is come out with a spreader and granulate your yard 10 to 15 feet around the entire perimeter of your home. The bugs think it is food, they'll take it down to their colony, and it'll spread like a virus at the source. That way you guys can enjoy your yard. Sound good?"

Transition: "Now, as far as pricing goes..."

5 Principles To Nail The Service

1. Ask Generic Questions

"The first thing I need to take care of is up in the eaves. You know how everyone occasionally gets spiders and wasps up there?"

2. Build A Problem

"Those nests just continue to grow if unaddressed."

3. What We Do

"What I need to do is come out with a webster pole, it extends up to 30 feet. It's kind of like a glorified toothbrush. I'll sweep and treat all of your eaves on both the first and second levels of your home."

4. Explain The Benefit

"Why this is important is it obviously makes the house look really nice, but it also prevents those colonies from creeping up into the attic through your vents and prevents them from eventually trickling down into the home."

5. Get Agreement

"Does that make sense?"

Additional Features:

The Interior

"Are you seeing anything on the inside or is it mostly on the outside? Awesome, obviously it's normal to see occasional bugs on the inside so I also offer a custom interior service where I'll treat common hot spots to make sure I flush those bugs that are inside, out of the home. The best part is ALL of my products are pet and kid-friendly so you won't need to leave the home or anything crazy like that but that way I'm able to keep the bugs out of the home for you!"

Guaranteed Results

"I'm so confident my products will work that I'll leave you with a full guarantee on the property. What that means is I'll come out for free in between visits if you ever see an uptick in pest activity for no additional charge!"

Quality Products

"I also just care more about the products I use. Everything I use is the best of the best. It's all also kid and pet-friendly. I also care more about the treatment I provide. I'm very detailed and thorough to make sure I do the best job to take care of your pest issues and put the right product in the right places for you."

Customer Service

"At RIDD, we honestly just care more. We care more about our customers and it's a top priority to provide amazing customer service. If you look at our reviews it just speaks for itself. We actually have a ___/5 with over ___ reviews which is pretty awesome, right?"

By mastering the service, you will build enough curiosity that your customers will have a high perceived value in the service. They will also be emotionally connected to our service based on the needs you identified. Now they'll want to know how much it's going to cost them!

The script is important to follow, but make sure you're asking plenty of questions! For more information on asking questions and building value, refer to "Question-Based Selling" in the section titled, "Sales Communication."

PRICING

Jacksonville
Dr

South Beach
Pkwy

Everyone's perceived value for pest control is going to vary. Give yourself room to negotiate with price and don't be afraid to start your price high. However, you should never lose a deal over price, so be willing to compromise. Be cautious of dropping the price too low, too quickly. It will devalue the service and make it seem cheap. Here's an example of how to roll out pricing:

"As far as pricing goes, what's the square footage of your home?"

"Awesome, for a house your size it'd normally be $___ DOLLARS. After that, we just bill you monthly like a Netflix or Hulu subscription and that's cheap, it's just $___ BUCKS a month for our (package offered)."

"BUT, since we're here in the area and I need to fill these spots, I'm taking $___ DOLLARS off that initial visit, doing the whole thing for just $___ BUCKS. And that's for everything!"

Now, you're going to be here tomorrow, right?"

Let's talk about a couple principles to implement when rolling out pricing.

After you roll out pricing, you MUST ask them to purchase by using a HARD close. Refer to the "Closing" section of the Objections Manual for effective ways to close your customers.

Anchoring

In sales, the anchoring effect refers to a bias consumers have where they rely on the first piece of information they receive. To implement this, anchor with the pricing we normally offer first. Studies have shown that anchoring can influence our buying decisions.² After you mention our original price, talk about the discounted pricing you're offering. Anchoring helps create urgency for the customer to make a decision and take advantage of a good deal while you're on their porch. Make sure you're implementing anchoring in your pitch!

Maximizing and Minimizing

Maximizing and minimizing is another important principle in sales. You'll notice in the pricing script the words, "bucks" and "dollars" are bolded. There are two things you want to maximize: the original price as well as the discount you're offering. Maximize the words, "dollars" and "bucks" with the tone of your voice. Raising your tone helps capture attention and it also emphasizes the key points you want them to remember. In this case, it would be the discount you're offering when you roll out the price. Use this same maximizing principle to highlight key points throughout your entire pitch.

On the flip side, you want to minimize the price the customer will end up paying. This isn't to be deceiving but rather to help them feel that it's something that's going to be easy for them to afford. In reality, their pest control bill will most likely be cheaper than their Wi-Fi bill. We justify purchases all the time by telling ourselves it was cheap. Does this phrase sound familiar? "Those shoes were on sale, I got a good deal on them." That may be true, but you also ended up making a purchase on something you didn't necessarily need. Regardless of the sale, you still spent money. On that same note, pest control will typically never make a big dent in their monthly budget. Most people have a service and are already paying for pest control. Minimizing will help them see additional value in the deal you're offering them.

THE AGREEMENT

Once you get through pricing, move on to the agreement. Whether the customer is fully committed at this point or not, assume the sale and start getting them on board. You will most likely have to resolve some concerns and objections throughout the process. In this section, we'll talk about important points to remember as you go through the agreement with your customers.

Refer to The Objections Manual for all of the things you may hear before getting a full commitment from a customer. You can also find a skeleton pitch of the agreement in the Appendix of this manual as well.

Set Proper Expectations

The best thing that you can do as a sales rep is under-promise and over-deliver. You'll very rarely have unresolvable issues if you're honest and upfront with your customers. You could promise them a Lamborghini with the service if that's what it took for them to buy but if you don't follow through then they may as well have never bought in the first place. The customer will be upset, you won't get paid, and no one wins. As a sales rep, the worst thing in the world is when a customer cancels and you don't get paid because of a simple miscommunication. Make sure the following agreement terms are very clear with your customers:

1. We bill MONTHLY regardless of the frequency of visits.
2. Their Service frequency and how often we go out to service their home.
3. We do NOT do one-time treatments.
4. The duration of their contract.
5. The interior is included by request.
6. Free reservices are included in their package.
7. A cancellation fee is required to be paid back if they cancel early.
8. The service charge (aka the merchant fee to run payment for their card) will be charged monthly.
9. The bugs that WILL and WILL NOT be covered in their packages.

In order to solidify these points, be confident when you roll them out. These terms are almost never a big deal as long as you roll them out confidently and clearly. These are all common parts of agreements with home-service companies. Repeat these terms multiple times throughout your sales process to make sure everyone is on the same page. Get your customers started off on the right foot with RIDD!

Solidify The Sale

With some of your customers, the sales process may take you 5 minutes to get on and off the porch with payment information and a signed agreement. With other deals, it may take an hour for you to intricately piece together everything a customer may need to purchase the service. Regardless, solidify every customer before leaving their home. Here are a few things you should do on every deal before you leave to solidify your sales.

1 Ask for Referrals

When signing someone up, they're usually at a "high" in that moment with their new purchase. They're excited to give RIDD a shot and pest control is fresh on their mind. Ask for referrals! The best business comes through word of mouth and referrals. Referrals will be your easiest deals because of where the reference is coming from. You're selling yourself short on potential deals if you aren't asking for their friends, family, and neighbors to use RIDD as well.

2 Summarize

Before you leave, summarize what we're going to be doing one more time for them. It never hurts to solidify everything one last time. Here is an example:

"Thanks again for giving us a shot. Again, tomorrow while we're out here we're going to be taking care of those eaves for you, we'll be doing that 6-foot foundation spray around the base, and we'll granulate and inspect your yard for those (bug issues). If you have any other questions or need anything else done like the inside, just let your service pro know and they'll take really good care of you!"

3 Express Gratitude

Leave your customer's homes by expressing your gratitude for their business. Thank them for giving you the opportunity to help them out. Use a sincerity-close such as, "You're going to love the service." It'll make customers feel that you're not just another salesperson who forced them into buying, but that you're passionate about what you do and are genuinely thankful for them!

SWITCHOVERS

To maximize your sales, you also need to learn how to sell to people who already use a pest control company. In this section, we'll talk about a few important suggestions for mastering the switchover sale. Here is an overview of the process for a switchover pitch, then let's get into it!

- 1. Intro
- 2. Interview Process
- 3. Competitor's Service
- 4. Power Phrase
- 5. Service
- 6. Pricing

The Switchover Pitch will most likely be the pitch you use the majority of the time because of the markets RIDD is located in. Refer to the Appendix for the switchover pitch.

Intro

First, find the common companies everyone uses in your neighborhood. Adjust your intro by mentioning those companies early on. Here's an example on how you can adjust your intro in an area where most people use a company:

"Hey, how are ya? Good, my name is (your name), I'm the route manager with RIDD. Have you seen our trucks in the area the past couple of days? Cool, we take care of (customer's names we take care of) and (# of homes we service) in the neighborhood. It's mostly been for the ants, spiders, and wasps, just the normal bugs everyone gets this time of year. Anyways, I know most people had a service prior to upgrading to us. Who's taking care of the bugs for you guys currently are you guys still using (Competitor #1 or Competitor #2) like some of the other homes or have you guys been using someone else for the bugs?"

The Interview Process

Go through a casual interview process with them. You need to gather some information which will help you understand who they use, how often they come out, and why they chose that specific company. Here is an example of the interview process:

"Perfect, that's exactly why I'm here. They come out quarterly for you, right?"

"Awesome. Have you guys been using them for a while now?"

"Nice, and do you guys use them for more preventative reasons or what bugs are they typically treating for when they are out here?"

Make sure to not ask too many questions otherwise your customers may feel like it's more of an interrogation. As you get familiar in an area, you'll recognize that some questions may be more valuable to generally ask than others. Here are some additional examples of questions you can ask:

"How have they been for you guys, are they doing an okay job for you?"

"If you were to upgrade/switch, would it be for a better service or for a better price?"

"And just to make sure, are they doing the pest control for you or is it just the termite control?"

Competitor's Service

After the interview process, briefly summarize what their company is doing so you can understand the main things they like with their current service. This will also portray you as an expert in the field since you know what their company is doing for them. Here is what you can say:

"Great. And I'm sure you have seen the service when they come out for you, right?"

"Awesome, I know (competitor's name) pretty well. Correct me if I'm wrong, when they come out for you guys, they'll squirt around the base of the home, come inside if you need them to, and you can call them out for free in between visits, right? Awesome, are there any other reasons you really like them or is that mostly what they're doing for you?"

Power Phrase

If your customers already have a company they may be thinking in the back of their heads that they won't need another company. Build curiosity and give them a reason to hear you out! We call this a power phrase, here's an example:

"Perfect. The ONLY reason I ask... No one's mad at their company but everyone has been giving us a shot because of all the extra work we're doing. If it makes sense for you, great! If it doesn't, no worries! At least you'll know what's going on in the neighborhood."

Service

You never want to speak down on another company but with the information you've gathered, the bar is now set. As you go through each part of the service, compare our service to the expectations they have with their current company. Show them how what we do can improve their current situation and raise the bar. Let's go through some examples:

The Yard

"The biggest difference is what I'm doing out here in the yard. That's where most of your bugs come from, right? So not only am I spraying the base of your home like (competitor's name), but I'm also playing a lot of offense out here in the yard. What I need to do is come out and granulate the yard for you guys. I actually do a 10 to 15-foot granular spread around the entire perimeter of the home. The bugs will pick up the bait and take it back down to the colonies where it'll spread at the source. Why this is important is it will make it a more permanent solution for you guys. Do you see how using a granulation would be a little bit more effective for you guys?"

Transition: "Now like you mentioned,"

The Base

"Your company is doing that squirt around the base of your home, right? The problem is, some of those bugs will still find ways into the home if there isn't enough coverage so what I'll do for you guys is a 3-foot by 3-foot power spray around the entire base, which gives you an entire 6 feet of coverage to seal up those cracks and crevices for you. The best part is the product is weather proof so rain or shine, my product will protect your home from any bugs trying to find their way inside. Does that make sense?"

Transition: "Lastly, just to go above and beyond, everyone loves how we include spider and wasp control."

The Eaves

"You know how over time you'll tend to get some wasps and spiders up in the eaves of your home? Yeah, so what I need to do to prevent those from getting up into the attic and trickling down into the home is I come out with a 30-foot webster pole, it's like a glorified toothbrush, and I'll sweep and treat all of your eaves and overhangs with a product on the end of the brush to prevent those bugs from nesting on your home. That's where your (bug issue) tend to nest like we said, right? Do you see how that'll better help you see a reduction in (bug issue)?"

Transition: "Now, when was the last time (Competitor's Name) came out for you guys?"

A photograph of a porch area. In the foreground, a blue wooden rocking chair with a cane back and a blue and white patterned seat cushion sits on a tiled floor. Behind the chair is a white door with a large oval glass window featuring a white geometric design. To the left of the door is a small statue on a pedestal. A brown doormat with the word 'WELCOME' is on the floor. The porch has a white ceiling with a yellow beam. The right side of the image shows a white brick wall.

On top of comparing and contrasting, include any other additional features we offer that'll matter to your customers. This will vary for every person so above all, just make it make sense for your customers! Get them to see the value in the differences of what we provide versus what they're currently getting. It's like upgrading phones every couple of years. With the additional features and benefits, upgrading will always make sense!

DO-IT-
YOURSELFERS

Do-it-yourselfers are people that choose to do pest control treatment themselves. You won't run into them as often as start-up and switch-over customers, but it's still important to understand how to handle them when they come up! With Do-It-Yourselfers, you need to understand WHY they've chosen to do it themselves. Here are a few reasons why they treat for bugs themselves:

- 1. They enjoy doing it themselves.
- 2. They're concerned about chemicals.
- 3. They don't know that pest control companies provide recurring services.
- 4. They've had issues with their prior company and elected to treat it themselves due to their prior bad experience.
- 5. They don't really care to treat much because they don't have a lot of bug issues that concern them.
- 6. They do it themselves to save money.

Before you get into the service, you need to try to figure out what type of do-it-yourselfer you're talking to so you can tailor the pitch to their needs! You'll go through a very similar process as you would while pitching a switchover customer. Here's an example of the process:

The Interview Process

"Awesome, have you ever used a company before or have you always just done it yourself?"

(If they say yes, you could also pitch them like a switchover with their last experience with their old company as the baseline).

"Cool, and I'm assuming you're typically just spraying around the base of the home every now and then, right?"

"Sweet. Are you just using Ortho Home Defense? That white bottle with a red label on it?"

Power Phrase

Here are a couple examples you can use as a power phrase to build curiosity:

"Nice. The interesting thing is those products off the shelves are generally diluted down to 99.3% water. Everyone LOVES that our products are guaranteed for a full 90 days, which gives you lasting results."

"Perfect. The ONLY reason I ask... Everyone has been giving us a shot because of all the work we are doing for them. If it makes sense for you, great! If it doesn't, no worries! At least you'll better know how pest control works."

Compare and Contrast Services

Just like switchovers, compare and contrast. Do-it-yourselfers tend to be the ones that can be a little prideful about the work they do so make sure you keep it light but also help them understand that what we do can provide a better solution for them!

The Eaves

"The first thing I need to take care of is up in the eaves. You know how everyone occasionally gets spiders and wasps up there? I know it's annoying for you when you have to get up there to whack them down so what I do is I come out with a webster pole, it's a 30-foot extendable brush. I sweep and treat all of your eaves, on both the first and second levels of your home. This is important because it obviously makes the house look nice, but it also prevents those colonies from creeping up into the attic through your vents and from eventually trickling down into the home."

Transition: "Next is the foundation of the home."

The Base

"You're smart to treat around the house, it's obviously to prevent bugs from getting into the home, right? Bugs just use these entry points as freeways in and out of the home so what I do for you that's a little different is I actually give you 6 feet of coverage, going 3 feet up and 3 feet out around the base of your home. That'd be like an entire bottle of Ortho in just a single treatment. Why this is important is I'm flushing those bugs out of the wall voids of your home so you don't see anything pop up on the inside."

Transition: "Lastly, ____ was doing it themselves too and the reason they gave us a shot is what we're doing for them out here in the yard."

The Yard

"This is really where all your bugs come from, right? Those colonies will continue to spread if I don't take care of it for you so what I do is I come out with a spreader and granulate your yard 10 to 15 feet around the entire perimeter of your home. The bugs think it is food, they'll take it down to their colony, and it'll spread like a virus at the source. Some of those colonies can nest up to 5 feet underground. Does that make sense how a liquid spray won't be as effective as the granule we're using?"

Transition: "The best part is the price..."

SALES COMMUNICATION

Only 7% of a message's meaning comes from what you say.³ Up to this point of the manual, most of what we've talked about revolves on the script and what to say. That is only a small portion of the picture! In sales, there are three forms of communication:

Verbal, Para-Verbal, and Non-Verbal.

In this section, we'll touch on each of these and help you master each of the forms of communication!

Verbal Communication

Verbal communication is the pitch that you memorize. The scripts are super important because it allows you to have a guideline of what to say, when to say it, and the general process you should follow. What you don't want to do is become robotic or feel that you have to say the right thing all the time or else you'll lose a deal. That's not the case! During your training process, the reason we focus on memorizing the pitch first is we want to get it memorized and out of the way. We want you to focus less on what you're saying and more on what you look like while you're pitching! Here are a few important points to touch on with verbal communication.

Positive/Negative Connotations

In sales, there are certain words that can have negative connotations tied to them which can portray the wrong message. Be cautious with your word choice and make sure you avoid triggering any negative emotions with your customers. Below are a few examples of loaded words to be cautious of and some alternatives you can use:

Negative

Question-Based Selling

Let your customers tell you how to sell them by asking the right questions. Here are some examples:

"Do you usually get the ants just on the outside or is it occasionally on the inside as well?"

"Have you guys been here for a while or are you guys new to the area?"

"Are the mosquitos bad mostly in just the summertime or is it more of a year-round issue for you guys?"

"Do you mostly get wasps in the eaves or is it occasionally the spiders as well?"

Asking questions is like getting a suit tailored or a dress altered. A tailored suit or an altered dress will look really good on the person it was meant for but if you put that suit or dress on someone else, it might look terrible. Similarly, if you don't ask questions, it's like you're trying to put that suit or dress on a person where it might not fit. Get creative with your questions and be attentive to how your customers respond. Asking questions will allow your customers to open up to you and it will also help you better tailor your pitch to their needs!

There are times when verbal communication can be critical to sealing the deal in make-or-break moments. Refer to the One-Liners section of the Objections Manual for helpful phrases you can implement in your pitch to help seal additional deals.

Para-Verbal Communication

Para-verbal communication makes up 38% of your communicated message and focuses more on HOW you say things. The way you speak with people will differ depending on who your audience is. For example, the way a customer support agent speaks with an angry customer will be different from the way a coach would instruct an athlete in the middle of an intense game. There are a few factors that are involved with para-verbal language so let's talk about how you can implement each of them into your pitch.

Tone

Tone deals with the fluctuations of your voice. When you ask someone a question in normal conversation, you typically end the question with an up-tone. For example, imagine saying, "Are we going to the game tomorrow?" You probably read that and the sentence ended with an uptone. In sales, you always want to end your sentences with down-tones, even with questions. Try repeating that same sentence now with a down tone. "Are we going to the game tomorrow?" It's subtle and sometimes hard to recognize, but downtones shows assumptiveness and they demand respect!

Volume

Volume is also really important in para-verbal communication. Changing the volume of your voice from loud to quiet or vice-versa can help you emphasize certain features and parts of your pitch. If you're too loud, you'll come off as salesy. If you're too quiet, you'll come off as timid. A great example of when you can utilize volume is when you're doing a price drop. Get quiet and make it hurt! When you drop your contract value, the only person that it hurts is you so make them feel that! Customers need to feel the impact of your price drops. It adds more value when you can show that you mean it. Additionally, understand your audience. With people that are naturally quiet, speak softly and match their volume. With customers that have strong personalities, match their volume as well. In sum, controlling the volume of your voice will help emphasize highlights of your pitch and it also allows the conversation to flow with enthusiasm.

Speed

At times, sales reps will find themselves speaking super fast during their pitch. The voice in their head says "If I can just tell them everything and get it all out, they'll buy!" This is actually the opposite of what will happen. Speaking fast is what most inexperienced door-to-door sales reps do because they might be nervous. Go against the grain and be slow and methodical with your pitch! Having a slow pace to your pitch will allow customers to follow along and they'll be able to better engage with you. Vomiting out information will never get you anywhere. Be calm, cool, and collected while pitching and you'll leave your customers with really good impressions. A HUGE downfall for inexperienced sales reps is not allowing customers any time to digest what was said. Remember, slowing down and pausing is something that you should run toward and not away from!

Silence

With that being said, don't be afraid of silence! Silence is powerful and it's a great way to help you get agreement from customers. This sounds obvious but when you ask a question, always wait for a response. Sometimes sales reps will ask a question such as "So you know how you'll get wasps and spiders up in your roofline?" and then continue on with their pitch without any sort of acknowledgment from the customer. Wait for their answer, even if it ends up being a negative response. Instead, learn to overcome rejections rather than avoiding them by not letting them speak. Silence is great because it keeps a customer accountable to listening and it also gives them time to think. In turn, they will give you legitimate responses that will allow you to better understand their needs.

Enthusiasm

You MUST believe in the product and more importantly you must believe in yourself! Be excited when you are with a customer! No one wants to buy something from someone who isn't stoked about what they're selling. Pest control is an emotional sell and a lot of times, customers will buy because they not only like the service, but they also like you! Imagine if someone were to knock on your door and sell you a service. What do you imagine that salesperson would be like? They'd probably be relatable, likable, and have high energy, right? Be that kind of salesperson on the doors as well!

Non-Verbal Communication

Imagine turning on Netflix and putting the show on mute. Although you may not enjoy it as much, you most likely would be able to understand the context of the show as well as the gist of the dialogue based purely on the acting. This illustrates how impactful body language is in communication. Non-verbal language makes up 55% of our communication and focuses on what you look like while you're communicating. Let's talk about some of the most important things you need to incorporate into your pitch.

Head Nods

By the time you get home at night from knocking doors, your neck should be sore from the amount of head nodding you did that day. You should be head nodding throughout your entire pitch. Head nods sub-consciously lead the conversation toward an agreement, which in this case is for them to purchase the service. Here are some times you should be head nodding:

1. When you soft/hard close a customer.
2. After you ask them a question.
3. Anytime you want a customer to agree with you.
4. When a customer is giving you an objection.

With #4, head nodding during objections communicates to a customer that you expected them to bring up their concern, and as soon as they are done talking you will let them know how you can help them. It keeps you locked in during moments when a customer is trying to object and shut the conversation down. When a customer gives you an objection, it really just means there hasn't been enough value built yet. Ultimately, head nodding displays confidence in what you are doing.

Smile

People like to talk to happy people! They also like buying from people they like. Smiling is a great way to raise the energy in a conversation. Smile often throughout your pitch. Smile when:

1. First meeting your prospects.
2. Someone objects or says, "no".
3. Making a joke.

Hand Gestures

Paint a picture with your customers! Help them visualize what you're doing. It'll help create a problem in their mind if they can envision the benefits of what you're offering. With your hand gestures, make sure you never cross your arms or point across your body. Always keep your body language open. Don't make your illustrations too large that it takes away from your pitch but make sure to use them enough that your customers see value in the service. With pest control, there will be some homes where you'll be able to point out visual problems that we can solve like a wasp nest or spider web on the home. There will be other houses where there isn't much to point out so that's where hand gestures can help you paint the picture regardless of the home you're at! Working with your managers is the best way to catch any unnecessary quirks you might be using with your hand gestures. Another GREAT way is to either pitch yourself in the mirror or record yourself. You'll be able to see some of the most obvious gestures for yourself.

Body Posture

First-year sales reps tend to do either one of two things. Either they do the "potty dance" and shuffle their feet back and forth, or they bounce their legs and lock out their knees. Both of these portray a lack of confidence and honestly just look weird. Be confident with your posture. There are two stances you want to implement to keep natural body language:

Business Mode

Business mode is where your weight is on your front foot when you're standing. An easy tip to make sure you are in business mode before a customer opens up the door is to lift up your back foot and put it right back down. This will help you make a conscious effort to keep your weight on one foot so you can't shuffle around.

Casual Mode

In a casual stance, your weight is on your back foot. An easy way to stay in a more casual position is to lean up against a wall or rail while on their porch. Casual mode can help build rapport with a customer and if your pitch is a little more laid back rather than all business, this is a great way to also prevent yourself from swaying back and forth.

Mirroring

Reflecting the body language of a customer is a great way to build trust with them. When mirroring, make sure you're mirroring positive body language and not negative postures. For example, if someone has their arms folded, don't reflect that and fold your arms too. Rather, recognize negative body language and get them to open up by interacting with them. Hand them your tablet or your slick to get them engaged. On the other hand, an example of implementing positive mirroring would be if someone leans up against their door frame while talking to you. This is a sign they're open to speaking with you. Lean up against the wall as well. The best time to transition into a mirrored position with a customer is when they're talking. Mirroring non-verbally shows that you're listening to what they're saying. Sales is a transfer of energy and mirroring not only helps you connect with the customer, it also makes them feel validated and heard.

Eye Contact

Making eye contact with a customer is also important for building trust and displaying confidence. Having shifty eyes, rolling your eyes, or not making eye contact at all are all signs of nervousness. Make strong eye contact but don't make it weird. The intro is the best place to start off on a good note with good eye contact. When you first introduce yourself, make eye contact for the first 5 seconds within meeting them, then break it by looking down at your shirt and pointing to the company name/logo. Another very important time to maintain good eye contact is while you are overcoming objections and concerns. You need to be able to display confidence with your potential customers in moments when they're objecting. The goal with eye contact is to have natural conversations with your customers as if you were having conversations with people you already knew.

A photograph of a suburban street scene. The road is paved and leads into the distance. On the left side, there are lush green trees and bushes. On the right side, several cars are parked along the curb, and a utility pole with power lines is visible. The sky is overcast with soft, grey clouds. The word "MINDSET" is overlaid in large, white, bold, sans-serif capital letters across the center of the image.

MINDSET

Sales is 20% skillset and 80% mental.
What you believe about yourself, your demeanor, and your energy will make up the majority of your success. This job will not only teach you invaluable sales skills that you can apply throughout your life, but you will also learn a lot about yourself throughout the process. In this section, we will talk about how to conquer your mind and the mentality to have in order to succeed.

1 Do Hard Things

Choose to do hard things in preparation for the sales season. Run a marathon, complete an Iron Man, or read 50 books in a year. It doesn't matter what it is as long as it's hard for you. Hard is relative to every individual but choose activities that will be difficult for you to accomplish. When you willingly choose to do hard things, hard becomes the new normal. When you go out to knock doors, it'll just be another part of your "normal" because you're already doing hard things!

2 Develop Strong Habits

Create strong habits for yourself before you go out to knock. It's harder to break bad habits rather than just beginning with good ones in the first place. Keep good habits as well as your routine dialed in while you're out in market to maintain consistency in your life.

3 Control the Controllables

Focus on what you can control and recognize the things you can't. When you're on the doors, there are a lot of things that happen that'll be out of your control. You can do all you can, but ultimately a customer decides whether they want to buy or not. You can't control how a person will act when they open the door, you can't control their pets, and you can't control what might be going on back home while you're gone. Let those things come and go and stay present with each new prospect you talk with.

4 Be Obsessed with Improvement

Never be satisfied with mediocrity. Constantly work on yourself, your pitch, and your mindset. This is what will ultimately affect your results. Always be hungry for the next deal until the day is over. Additionally, after your day is over or every morning before your day starts, take time to reflect on how you can improve. A great little habit that goes a long way is a quick, daily 5-minute journal entry with your thoughts that includes 3 things you liked about your previous day as well as 1-2 things you want to work on for the next day. Reflecting on your days will help you recognize where you can improve. On top of that, never hesitate to ask your manager questions. You don't know what you don't know. Stay obsessed and you'll never end up disappointed with your results over the course of the summer.

5 Build Confidence

Confidence is the biggest mental factor in how well you'll sell. The best way to increase your confidence before the summer is preparation. Train, train, train. During the summer, constant self-talk and self-belief will raise your confidence. Listen to self-development books or podcasts to constantly feed your mind. The mind is like a well and you need to be conscious of what you're pouring into it.

6 The Voice Inside Your Head

Positive self-talk is so important in having a big summer. You are what you think you are. The author of Untethered Soul, Michael Singer, talks about the "voice inside your head."⁴ Think about it, the voice inside your head is constantly spitting out all kinds of information like a computer that never turns off. When you're awake, you're constantly processing everything around you. When you're asleep, you dream. The voice inside your head never stops. Regardless, Singer says that the voice is not you. You're just the one who listens to it. Make sure you're conscious of your thoughts throughout the summer and make sure you're choosing to reaffirm beliefs that are only going to make you better. Negative thoughts won't ever do you any good.

7 Have a Strong WHY

Motivation is great, but it isn't always going to be there. There will be days when you're super motivated and other days when you aren't. Motivation isn't always reliable, but discipline is. Having a strong WHY will tether you to staying disciplined rather than just motivated on days when you're not in the best head-space. Everyone's WHY will be unique to them. For some, it may be to pay their way through college debt-free. For others, it might be to support their family. Maybe they just want to prove to themselves that they can do something hard. Whatever it may be, a strong and clear WHY will help keep you dedicated to your bigger vision.

8 No Victim Mentality

Your life will unfold in ways that are different from how you expect it to at times. Rather than asking yourself "Why me?" ask "What can I do about this?" If you can't do anything about it, then don't worry about it. You might have a slower day and think "Why is everyone in my neighborhood so rude?" or "No one in my neighborhood can afford this!" This kind of victim mentality will destroy your mindset and will botch potential deals that you WOULD have closed had you been in a good mindset. Stay positive!

9 The Valley of Disappointment

Sales naturally attracts talented individuals. You may have been really good at football, maybe you were a team captain, or maybe you were just good at pulling off the NCMO's in high school. Sales is no respecter of persons. You MUST have high goals and expectations for yourself. What tends to happen is what James Clear, in his book "Atomic Habits," calls the "valley of disappointment."

In the graph below, you'll see the straight line which represents how sales reps tend to expect their results to go. The curved line represents what actually tends to happen. Sometimes the payoff comes later than expected. Be patient with your day-to-day struggles and learn to take a step back when you're feeling disappointed in yourself or your results. Over time, what you'll recognize is you'll reach far beyond even your own expectations. Everyone's learning curve is different so there is no need to compare yourself to others. Keep your head down and the results will come.

The Valley of Disappointment⁷

In Grant Cardone's book, "The Closer's Survival Guide," he relates sales to sending a rocket ship into space. You could send a billion rocket ships into space, but if you don't have the mathematics and science dialed in, those rocket ships will never go where you want them to.⁶

AREA MANAGEMENT

Door-to-door sales is a numbers game. On average, you'll have about 40-50% of your prospects answer the door on any given day. If you knock enough doors, you'll ALWAYS find people that you can close within your skillset. With every additional door you knock on, your pitch will get better and the scope of people you'll be able to close will get bigger. You'll begin to close people that you may not have been able to sell when you first started. With that being said, door-to-door sales is also a calculated numbers game. Let's talk about some of the things you can do to strategically manage your areas and maximize your sales.

Knocking Your Area

Knocking your areas strategically gives you the best opportunity to close the most deals. Your job is to talk to as many people as possible. Most of the areas your managers cut for you will be enough for you to knock doors for a minimum of 2 days. The best sales reps tend to stay in their areas for a lot longer than that. Some sales reps even “milk” their areas for over a week! As you get familiar with an area, you’ll start to build momentum, get comfortable with the area, and become familiar with the problems everyone in the area deals with. Here’s a few things you should do to manage your area well:

1 The Door Knock

Knocking on a door is generally the first impression you make with your prospects. You don’t want to knock too loud and sound like you’re an FBI Agent with a warrant out for their arrest. You also don’t want to sound like a timid scout asking for donations and knock too quietly. They won’t hear you and won’t even come to the door. Use a welcoming knock as if you were a family member knocking on their door visiting them.

2 Knock Multiple Times

When knocking on a customer’s door, knock multiple times. The first time, just knock. The second time, knock and ring the doorbell. You’re trying to avoid them answering on their doorbell camera but rather come out to speak with you in person. Your chances of closing people are always best when you have your prospects in front of you face-to-face.

3 Spot-Knocking

Spot-knocking is a strategy where you knock what we call “signs of life.” You’re looking for homes that have cars parked in the driveway, the blinds are open, the garage door is open, etc. Start off every area by knocking everything but if you find yourself in a neighborhood where you have a lot of “not-homes,” start spot-knocking so you can find as many people home as possible. After 5 or 6 pm, go back to where you began your day and knock every home you can without spot knocking for the rest of the night because people will generally be home from work and their activities for the day by then.

4 Geographic Hot Spots

Look for areas in your neighborhood that may have tree lines, ponds, fields, etc. These areas will tend to have a lot of bugs which means the homeowners nearby will most likely deal with those same issues too. If you're ever confused on where to start knocking in an area, starting near hot spots is a great strategy to help you build momentum early on in the day by knocking areas that likely have the worst bug problems.

5 Current Customers

Utilize current customers by bandwagoning. Knock around their homes and name-drop them. A lot of times, their neighbors have actually seen our trucks servicing their neighbors homes before which gives you a lot of credibility when you swing by their home.

6 RIDD Truck in Your Area

If there's a RIDD truck servicing a current customer or one of your sales in your area, knock around the truck to use it as a way to build urgency. The truck also helps build credibility when you offer them discounts for the service because you can easily justify the discounted prices. Knocking near a truck is proof that we're there in the area working with their neighbors.

7 Callbacks

Callbacks are prospects where you need to swing by their homes more than once to solidify or finalize a deal with them. Set your callbacks as the last stops you make that day. Treat your time on the doors as sacred and make sure you're talking to as many people as you can. Set your callbacks for after 8 pm. Your callbacks have already spoken to you before and it won't be weird for you to come back late since they are already expecting you to stop by.

These tips will allow you to maximize your time in your areas and will help you secure as many deals as you possibly can!

Knocking Behind Another Company

Door-to-door sales is a great way to generate business. Unfortunately, RIDD isn't the only company that knows this. Sometimes in the areas that your manager cuts for you, you'll hear a smokescreen where people might say "Someone else was just here." Other times you might even meet another sales rep who is in the area with you. Don't worry, door-to-door sales has worked for years and years and just because another person is in your neighborhood doesn't mean it's the end. Let's go through a few strategies for managing your area when someone is either in your neighborhood or you're knocking in an area where someone else recently knocked it.

1. Address the smokescreen before a prospect can even mention it.

"Hey, my name is (your name), I'm with RIDD. I'm actually not the solar guy/roofer/etc. You're going to see us out here..."

2. If it's another pest control company in your area, address the smokescreen in a different way.

"Hey, my name is (your name), I'm with RIDD. You probably spoke with my flyer guy/girl earlier, I'm actually the route manager for the area getting everyone taken care of."

3. Realize that if someone has been through your area, they're almost guaranteed to not be as trained as you are, they probably didn't manage their area super well, and they most definitely didn't talk to every single person in the neighborhood. In most neighborhoods, about half of the homes will answer the door. That means over half of the neighborhood never spoke with that salesperson that was in your area. NEVER let those few people who get upset with you for stopping by shortly after another sales rep affect your perception of an entire neighborhood.
4. If there's another sales rep from another company in your area and you speak with them, try to have them show you where they have knocked. Be strategic with what you do with the information they give you and knock what you can while splitting the neighborhood. What you'll tend to find is a lot of sales representatives will leave when they see you in the area as well.

Demographics

One of the exciting aspects of this job is the opportunity to develop communication skills by interacting with people from diverse backgrounds and interests. You will also knock in areas that have varying levels of income. The nice thing about pest control is that bugs don't discriminate. They can be found everywhere! In this section, we'll talk about general tips that tend to apply when you sell in different kinds of neighborhoods such as smaller, 900-square-foot homes, all the way up to 8,000-square-foot mansions.

Lower Income

1. Affordability

Emphasize the cost-saving benefits for customers. An example would be that in some of the markets RIDD operates in, some companies charge extra for fire ant control or wasp/spider control. With us, it's included in our general pest control so they're getting a better bang for their buck!

2. Cheap Deals

Phrases like "It's dirt cheap," or "For literally a couple bucks a day, we're doing ____." work well in lower-income areas.

3. Personal Connection

People in lower-income areas like to feel validated and heard. Get to know them on a personal level and make connections with them. In lower income areas, you can typically also be slower and more methodical with your pitch.

4. Small Business

Lower income individuals tend to like to support smaller businesses versus large corporate companies so mention that your office is a locally operated franchise as well!

Upper Income

1. High-Quality Product

Higher-income individuals generally like knowing they have a premium pest control service that can adapt to their needs. What is nice with RIDD is we offer ancillary services like mosquito and termite control so they can get everything that they'd like done all with the same company!

2. Customization

Higher income individuals also tend to like the idea of getting a custom treatment tailored to their home and to their needs. They may have specific concerns and requests that we can alter based on what they want.

3. Exceptional Customer Service

Don't be fake or fluffy in higher-income areas. They'll catch on to it quickly. Be punctual and professional. Let them know we'll be a reliable business to work with!

4. Brand Image

They want to know that they made a good choice using RIDD for their bug service. Use the materials RIDD provides you such as a door knocking slick or the software we provide on your tablet to show that we are not just an average pest control company.

5. Punctuality

In higher-income areas, you typically need to be a little quicker with your pitch, most notably in the intro. Save some of the fluff of the pitch and give them the most prominent features and benefits.

6. Convenience

They also want to know that their pest control issues are going to be taken care of as streamlined as possible. Be efficient and also assure them that the work our service pros do is effective and is one less thing they'll have to worry about!

Middle-income areas generally tend to lean to either one side or the other. Your job when you start working in a “cookie-cutter” neighborhood or in a middle-income area is to adapt to the feedback the customers give you. Middle-income areas tend to be some of the best neighborhoods for sales reps, you just need to understand the common themes and problems you find in the neighborhoods that you work in.

A small, light-colored building with a blue roof is situated on the left side of the road. A red stop sign is visible on the right side of the road. In the background, several two-story houses with grey roofs and white walls are visible. The houses are surrounded by lush green trees and manicured lawns. The overall scene depicts a well-maintained residential area.

OPERATIONS

At every home, we want to leave every customer beyond satisfied with our service. We call this, "The RIDD Effect." Every service professional has a 5-step process to follow while performing all of the features our customers expect us to perform. On top of that, the service pros will do these 5 things for every customer:

- 1. Message the customer and let them know the service pro is on the way.
- 2. Knock on the door and ask if they have anything they specifically want to be treated (interior, shed, specific bug activity, etc.).
- 3. Perform a premier service.
- 4. Perform an act of service (bring in garbage cans, clean up litter, clean snow off of a car, shut the gate, go the extra mile on the service, etc.).
- 5. Knock on the door and tell the customer everything that was done. If they aren't home, it's mandatory that service pros send a picture of something that was treated (wasps, spider web, ant mound, etc.) and tell them what we did to serve them.

RIDD is strategically positioned in the market as a premium pest control service. We aim to use the highest quality products to provide the best protection and service for our customers. This list is not comprehensive and we're always looking for the best products to use but here are some of the most common products we use at our customers' homes for the different services we provide.

The Eaves

Product: Delta Dust

Active Ingredient: Deltamethrin

Anatomy: Nonrepellent

Application: Service pros will sweep the windows, light fixtures, and 1st and 2nd stories of a home with loaded webster poles.

Effect: Delta dust kills bugs via ingestion or direct contact. This is generally used to treat wasps, mud daubers, and spiders that tend to nest directly in the home.

Labeled To Treat For: Ants (excludes carpenter, fire, and pharaoh ants), cockroaches, crickets, silverfish, millipedes, fleas, flies, beetles, boxelder bugs, centipedes, sowbugs, wasps, mud daubers, spiders.

The Base

Product: Suspend Polyzone

Active Ingredient: Deltamethrin

Anatomy: Nonrepellent (90-Day Residual)

Application: Service pros will spray 3 ft. up and 3 ft. out with an electric backpack power sprayer. Each home will take anywhere from 0.5-1.0 Gallon of product to spray the base. Suspend Polyzone is weather resistant which ensures lasting results in-between treatments regardless of the weather.

Effect: Suspend Polyzone affects the Central Nervous System.

Labeled to Treat For: Ants (includes fire ants), crickets, ticks, spiders, earwigs, centipedes, wasps, millipedes, sowbugs, cockroaches, silverfish, etc.

The Yard

Product: Delta Guard / Extinguish

Active Ingredient: Deltamethrin / Methoprene

Anatomy: Nonrepellent (water-soluble granule) / Bait

Application: Service pros will use a hand spreader to spread the granule 10-15 ft out. They'll also do a full yard inspection. Extinguish is additionally used as a spot treatment for fire ant mounds.

Effect: For both Delta Guard and Extinguish, foraging bugs will take it back to the colony where it spreads, preventing the bugs from reaching maturity or reproducing.

Labeled to Treat For: Weevils, Ants, cockroaches, mites, crickets, beetles, fire ants, grasshoppers, silverfish, ticks, spiders.

The Interior

Product: Alpine WSG

Active Ingredient: Dinotefuran

Anatomy: Nonrepellent

Application: Service pros will use the interior B&G sprayer to custom treat the inside of customers' homes. They'll treat water sources, entry points, and additional areas as needed such as entry points into the home.

They will not spray the entire interior or baseboards. It isn't necessary.

Effect: Alpine WSG disrupts an insect's central nervous system.

Flea Treatment: If the interior flea treatment is included, the service pros will be much more generous with the spraying, including carpeted areas and potentially infested pieces of furniture. The customers will need to leave the home for 4 hours and then vacuum daily for a week straight.

Labeled to treat for: Ants (includes fire and pharaoh ants), cockroaches, crickets, silverfish, millipedes, fleas, flies, beetles, boxelder bugs, centipedes, sowbugs, wasps, spiders.

Crack & Crevice

Product: Delta Dust

Active Ingredient: Deltamethrin

Anatomy: Nonrepellent

Application: Service pros will use a combination of liquid spray from their backpacks as well as they'll use a handheld pump filled with delta dust to treat the individual cracks, crevices, and weep holes of the home as needed.

Effect: Delta dust kill bugs via ingestion or direct contact.

Labeled to Treat For: Ants (includes fire and pharaoh ants), cockroaches, crickets, silverfish, millipedes, fleas, flies, beetles, boxelder bugs, centipedes, sowbugs, wasps, spiders.

Mosquito Reduction

Product: Scion

Active Ingredient: Gamma-cyhalothrin.

Anatomy: IGR (Insect Growth Regulator) / Contact kill (it's also microencapsulated for a residual effect).

Application: Service pros will use a Tomahawk Blower to fog all of the customer's foliage, shrubs, grass, etc.

Effect: Scion attacks the nervous systems causing paralysis.

Labeled to Treat For: Mosquitoes, ticks, fleas.

Snake Prevention

Product: Snake Away

Active Ingredient: Sulfur & Naphthalene

Anatomy: Repellent

Application: Service pros will use a spreader to granulate the property to repel snakes.

Effect: Snakes can essentially taste the air. This product has a scent that is super unpleasant for snakes so when a snake gets close to the property and “tastes” the product, they’ll relocate.

Rodent Control

Product: Selontra / Ditrac / Snap traps & sticky traps

Active Ingredient: Cholecalciferol / Diphacinone

Anatomy: Bait / Contact kill or trap

Application: Service pros will do an inspection to identify potential entry points. They’ll place 2-3 bait boxes around the exterior of the home to help prevent rodents from nesting in the home. Interior snap traps can also be placed inside the home.

Effect: Selontra builds a toxic level of calcium in rodents, causing kidney failure. Ditrac causes internal bleeding.

Labeled to Treat For: Rats, mice, voles

Mole Treatment

Product: Mole Scram / Repellex / Talpid / RCO

Active Ingredient: Castor Oil, Citronella Oil, Garlic Oil, & Peanut Hulls / Castor Oil, Cinnamon, Garlic, White Pepper / Bromethalin / Diphacinone

Anatomy: Bait / Repellent

Application: Service pros will granulate the full yard with repellent and place bait into as many of the tunnels as they can identify.

Effect: Mole Scram is a repellent that drives moles away. Repellex changes the molecular taste of the plants and it’s repulsive to moles. Talpid affects the brain and will get rid of moles within 48 hours of consumption. RCO solidifies blood which slows blood flow.

Labeled to Treat For: Moles

German Roach Treatment/ Vehicle Infestations

Product: MaxForce FC / Gentrol Point Source / Victor Pheromone Traps

Active Ingredient: Fipronil / Hydroprene

Anatomy: Bait / Bait + Monitoring / IGR

Application: Service pros will first do an inspection to locate nesting areas. They'll then place MaxForce in high-traffic areas (hinges, appliances, outlets, etc.) They'll also place monitors in cupboards, place Gentrol in afflicted areas to stop reproduction, and vacuum up excess roaches.

Effect: MaxForce FC kills roaches via ingestion or direct contact. Gentrol causes sterilization.

Labeled to Treat For: German Roaches

Termite (Sentricon) System

Product: Recruit HD

Active Ingredient: Noviflumuron

Anatomy: Bait

Application: Service pros will do an inspection to identify if they have active or past termite issues. We will NOT provide termite care if they do. If everything looks good, they'll install the Sentricon bait stations 10 ft apart around the foundation of the home.

Effect: Recruit HD prevents termites from molting.

Labeled to Treat For: Subterranean Formosan termites (excludes flying termites)

RIDDMADE™

RECRUITING

RIDDMADE™

One of the best ways to grow at RIDD is to build your own sales organization and get into ownership. The opportunity to franchise at RIDD is one of the unique things that sets us apart! Just like LinkedIn recruiters might reach out to you to hire you for their companies, you can also be a recruiter with this job to build your own teams. When recruiting others, present the unique value that RIDD provides in contrast to other sales companies.

What Makes RIDD Different?
Leadership	Opportunity	Comradery	Inclusive
Ownership	Entrepreneurial Spirit	Transparency	Understanding
Incentives	Culture	Selflessness	Authenticity
Stability		Humility

Your goal is to help them see how selling with RIDD is their best opportunity to not only personally grow, but one of the best opportunities for their bank accounts to grow as well! Here's a few suggestions as you talk with others about the opportunity to work here at RIDD:

The best teams also have the best comradery. The people in your inner circle are always the best place to start when you first begin recruiting people within your organization. After that, it would be your friends and acquaintances. Keep the circle as close as possible and expand it from there by working through their networks as well!

Keep recruiting genuine. Building teams is about THEM and how you can help THEM with their goals. It's NEVER about you. People can see through the "BS" so make sure that whatever you promise you also deliver on. What you'll find is recruiting ends up being the easy part of building your teams. The hard part is retaining them and keeping them happy. By staying genuine and keeping the mindset of helping others, you'll find that your organization will begin to naturally grow on it's own when you put others before yourself.

You need to know what sets RIDD apart from other companies and articulate that clearly for potential recruits as well. Speak from experience! Talk about the things that appealed for you when you chose to work with RIDD. Those same things will resonate with others as well. Just like with your sales on the doors, you never need to speak poorly of other companies when recruiting. Focus on what we do and let the results speak for themselves!

Tell stories. Stories are the easiest way for people to envision themselves working at RIDD. Find common ground with potential recruits by asking them questions. Get to know them and understand where they're coming from and use stories that are similar from your experiences to bridge the gap and break the ice with potential recruits. You'll find some of your best friends through this job!

Stay organized. When you go all in on recruiting it can get really crazy really fast. You need to make sure you are following up and keeping in contact with all of the new, the old, and the potential sales representatives that you want to work with. Following up and keeping in touch shows your commitment to them. This is also a good principle to learn with how you should treat your potential customers and callbacks while you are knocking as well!

Continue to provide value for everyone within your organization. They'll only grow as much as you're willing to grow yourself. Continue to teach them principles that will help them develop into better individuals and sales reps. What you'll find is it will in turn end up helping you grow the most.

SUMMER EXPECTATIONS

Knocking Season Non-Negotiables

1. Never Miss Meetings

The meetings both in the off-season as well as during the season are critical to sharpening the saw. Whether you're a first-year rep or an eighth-year, sales training is like weight training. If you don't use it you'll lose it. No one is exempt.

2. No Days Off

The knocking season is all about building momentum. Take time off when you must, but treat every day like gold. The knocking season will come and go before you know it.

3. Knock Until Dark

Knock until the day is over. When you're knocking at night, spot-knock the houses that look like there is still activity going on. Find lights that are on, homes with garage doors open, people that are out in their yards, etc. You'd be surprised over the course of the summer how many additional deals you'll be able to close just by finishing every day past dark.

4. Be The First In and Last Out

Be the first one to be dropped off and the last one to be picked up from area every day. The implication is that you respect your time on the doors and that you value every single door you are able to knock on that day.

5. Contribute to The Culture

Put the extra work in no one else is willing to do. Create a culture where working hard is what matters most. All ships rise with the tide. Do extra training and role plays at nights, in the mornings, or on your car rides out to area. Who you work with matters. Surround yourself around people that make you better. Additionally, be someone who makes those around you better as well.

6. Embrace the Process

When you shadow with your managers, you may watch them get an "easy" deal and think to yourself "Wow, literally anyone could've closed that deal. They're lucky they knocked into them." The thing is, is your managers have gotten so good at acknowledging customer's concerns throughout the sales process that they resolve concerns before they ever even become objections. They CREATE easy deals. On top of that, know that the easy deals really are out there. It's simple: knock the hours and you'll eventually run into people who will buy from you.

7. Work the Hours

Time on the doors (aka "TOD") is sacred. Your time during the summer will fly by so fast, so make the most of it. Your managers may change the schedules according to the team's needs but here is the standard schedule we knock at RIDD:

Monday - Friday:	10:30 am - Morning Meeting
	11:30 am - Lunch
	12:30 pm - Drive to Area
	1:00 pm - Knock Doors
	9:00 pm - End Knocking (Until Dark)
Saturday:	9:00 am - Morning Meeting
	9:45 am - Drive to Area
	10:30 am - Knock Doors
	4:00 pm - End Knocking

8. Have an Abundance Mindset

There are a lot of uncontrollable events that will happen throughout the summer. You can't control how people on the doors react. Regardless, choose to have an abundant mindset. Having an abundant mindset is seeing the glass half full rather than half empty. Negativity will NEVER do any good for yourself and it can also be a poison for the team. Constantly check yourself to make sure you aren't stuck too deep in the mud of negativity. Instead, stay level-headed through the uncontrollables. Some people wrongly have a "have, do, be" mindset. When I HAVE (the car, the house, the money, etc.), I'll DO (more work, more activities, more of what I want), and then I'll BE (happy, rich, more popular). What you need to have instead is a "be, do, have" mindset. I CHOOSE to BE (happy), it will allow me to DO (more work, more activities, more of what I want), and then I'll HAVE (the car, the house, the money).

Be Ethical

With great sales skills comes great responsibility too. Being honest, having integrity, and being ethical is the most critical component to sustained success in your work and your life. The worst trap you can find yourself in as a sales representative is selling in the gray area. Sales is black and white. You have a lot of room to accommodate to all of your individual customer's needs but you never want to mislead or lie to a customer to get a sale. Strive to be an individual that is accountable for your actions and you will find lasting success not only with RIDD but in your life as well.

Be Ethical (Seriously)

No amount of money or sales is worth your integrity or your reputation. Your name is tagged to each of your accounts so you should treat each sale with accountability. Obviously, we care about this principle a lot but we care about you more. If you learn anything during your time at RIDD, we hope that you learn principles of honesty and hard work that make the man/woman in the mirror proud.

A high-angle photograph of a modern apartment courtyard. On the left is a multi-story building with a white frame and black metal railings on the balconies. The courtyard features a large green lawn, a paved patio area with grey stone tiles, and several outdoor lounge chairs with blue cushions. A large planter box with red and white flowers sits on the patio. The building's facade is composed of large, light blue panels with small, square windows. The scene is brightly lit, with strong shadows cast across the lawn and patio.

SUMMER CHECKLIST

Make sure you have everything you need for the summer to feel comfortable while you're out in market with your team. Below is a general list of everything you might need.

Startup Pitch

THE INTRO:

"Hey, how are ya? Good, my name is (your name). I'm the route manager with RIDD. Have you seen our trucks in the area the past couple of days? Awesome, we take care of (customer's names we take care of) and (# of homes we service) in the neighborhood. It's mostly been for the ants, spiders, and wasps, just the normal bugs everyone gets this time of year. Anyways, the reason I'm swinging by is while I'm out here I'm getting EVERYONE done for over half off cause I have some spots I need to fill. Do you have someone taking care of the bugs for you or not yet? Cool, I'll just show you what we're up to real fast. . ."

SERVICE:

The Eaves

"The first thing I need to take care of is up in the eaves. You know how everyone occasionally gets spiders and wasps up there? Those nests just continue to grow if unaddressed. What I need to do is come out with a webster pole, it extends up to 30 feet. It's like a glorified toothbrush. I'll sweep and treat all of your eaves on both the first and second levels of your home. Why this is important is it obviously makes the house look really nice, but it also prevents those colonies from creeping up into the attic through your vents and prevents them from eventually trickling down into the home. Does that make sense?"

Transition: "My favorite part of the service is here at the base of the home."

The Base

"You know how you'll get little cracks and crevices around the foundation over time? Bugs will use these as freeways to get in and out of the home so what I need to do for you is come out and do a 3-foot by 3-foot power spray around the base of your home. Why this is important is I'm going to be able to flush those bugs out of the wall voids of your home so you don't see anything on the inside. Does that make sense how I can keep the bugs out of the home for you?"

Transition: "The reason (customer's name in the neighborhood) gave us a shot is what we are doing for them out here in the yard."

The Yard

"That's really where all your bugs come from, right? The colonies will eventually try to find their way into the home if I don't take care of it for you so what I do is come out with a spreader and granulate your yard 10 to 15 feet around the entire perimeter of your home. The bugs think it is food, they'll take it down to their colony, and it'll spread like a virus at the source. That way you guys can enjoy your yard. Sound good?"

Transition: "Now, as far as pricing goes..."

The Interior

"Are you seeing anything on the inside or is it mostly on the outside? Awesome, obviously it's normal to see occasional bugs on the inside so I also offer a custom interior service where I'll treat common hot spots to make sure I flush those bugs that are inside, out of the home. The best part is ALL of my products are pet and kid-friendly so you won't need to leave the home or anything crazy like that but that way I'm able to keep the bugs out of the home for you!"

Guaranteed Results

"I'm so confident my products will work that I'll leave you with a full guarantee on the property. What that means is I'll come out for free in between visits if you ever see an uptick in pest activity for no additional charge!"

Quality Products

"I also just care more about the products I use. Everything I use is the best of the best. It's all also kid and pet-friendly. I also care more about the treatment I provide. I'm very detailed and thorough to make sure I do the best job to take care of your pest issues and put the right product in the right places for you."

Customer Service

"At RIDD, we honestly just care more. We care more about our customers and it's a top priority to provide amazing customer service. If you look at our reviews it just speaks for itself. We actually have a ___/5 with over ___ reviews which is pretty awesome, right?"

PRICING:

"As far as pricing goes, what's the square footage of your home? Awesome, for a house your size it'd normally be $___ DOLLARS. After that, we just bill you monthly like a Netflix or Hulu subscription and that's cheap, it's just $___ BUCKS/month for our (package offered). BUT since we're here in the area and I need to fill these spots, I'm taking $___ DOLLARS off that initial visit, doing the whole thing for just $___. And that's for everything. Now, you're going to be here tomorrow, right?"

Switchover Pitch

INTRO:

"Hey, how are ya? Good, my name is (your name), I'm the route manager with RIDD. Have you seen our trucks in the area the past couple of days? Cool, we take care of (customer's names we take care of) and (# of homes we service) in the neighborhood. It's mostly been for the ants, spiders, and wasps, just the normal bugs everyone gets this time of year. Anyways, I know most people had a service prior to upgrading to us. Who's taking care of the bugs for you guys currently are you guys still using (competitor #1 or competitor #2) like some of the other homes or have you guys been using someone else for the bugs?"

Customer: "We're with (competitor name)."

INTERVIEW:

"Perfect, that's exactly why I'm here. They come out quarterly for you, right?"

"Awesome. Have you guys been using them for a while now?"

"Nice, and do you guys use them for more preventative reasons or what bugs are they typically treating for when they are out here?"

COMPETITOR'S SERVICE:

"Great. And I'm sure you have seen the service when they come out for you, right?"

"Awesome, I know (competitor's name) pretty well. Correct me if I'm wrong, when they come out for you guys, they'll squirt around the base of the home, come inside if you need them to, and you can call them out for free in between visits, right?"

"Cool, are there any other reasons you really like them or is that mostly what they're doing for you?"

POWER PHRASE:

"Perfect. The ONLY reason I ask... No one is mad at their company but everyone has been giving us a shot because of all the extra work we are doing. If it makes sense for you, great! If it doesn't, no worries! At least you'll know what's going on in the neigh-

SERVICE:

The Yard

"The biggest difference is what I'm doing out here in the yard. That's where most of your bugs come from, right? So not only am I spraying the base of your home like (competitor's name), but I'm also playing a lot of offense out here in the yard. What I need to do is come out and granulate the yard for you guys. I actually do a 10 to 15-foot granular spread around the entire perimeter of the home. The bugs will pick up the bait, and take it back down to the colonies where it'll spread at the source. Why this is important is it will make it a more permanent solution for you guys. Do you see how using a granulation would be a little bit more effective for you guys?"

Transition: "Now like you mentioned,"

The Base

"Your company is doing that squirt around the base of your home, right? The problem is, some of those bugs will still find ways into the home if there isn't enough coverage so what I'll do for you guys is a 3-foot by 3-foot power spray around the entire base, which gives you an entire 6 feet of coverage to seal up those cracks and crevices for you. The best part is the product is weather proof so rain or shine, my product will protect your home from any bugs trying to find their way inside. Does that make sense?"

Transition: "Lastly, just to go above and beyond, everyone loves how we include spider and wasp control."

The Eaves

"You know how over time you'll tend to get some wasps and spiders up in the eaves of your home? Yeah, so what I need to do to prevent those from getting up into the attic and trickling down into the home is I come out with a 30-foot webster pole, it's like a glorified toothbrush, and I'll sweep and treat all of your eaves and overhangs with a product on the end of the brush to prevent those bugs from nesting on your home. That's where your (bug issue) tend to nest like we said, right? So do you see how that'll better help you see a reduction in (bug issue)?"

Transition: "Now, when was the last time (competitor's name) came out for you guys?"

PRICING:

"Now, I know the Smith's down the street had (competitor's name) as well, and they were last serviced a couple months ago. When was the last time they came to service the home for you guys, you're probably on that same route, right? Awesome, if you were to call us out with an infestation, it'd normally be $___ DOLLARS for a house your size. After that we just bill you monthly like a Netflix or Hulu subscription and it's cheap, it's just $___ a month for our bi-monthly plan. BUT, since we're here in the area and I need to fill these spots, I'm taking $___ DOLLARS off that initial visit, doing the whole thing for just $___. And that's for everything. Now, you're going to be here tomorrow, right?"

Do-It-Yourselfer Pitch

INTRO:

"Hey, how are ya? Good, my name is (your name), I'm the route manager with RIDD. Have you seen our trucks in the area the past couple of days? Awesome, we take care of (customer's names we take care of) and (# of homes we service) in the neighborhood. It's mostly been for the ants, spiders, and wasps, just the normal bugs everyone gets this time of year. "Anyways, the reason I am swinging by is while I'm out here I'm getting EVERYONE done for over half off cause I have some spots I need to fill. Do you have someone taking care of the bugs for you or not yet?"

Customer: "I just do it myself."

INTERVIEW:

"Awesome, have you ever used a company before or have you always just done it yourself?" (If they say yes, you could also pitch them like a switchover with their last experience using their old company as the baseline).

"Cool, and I'm assuming you're typically just spraying around the base of the home every now and then, right?"

"Sweet. Are you just using Ortho Home Defense? That white bottle with a red label on it?"

POWER PHRASE:

"Nice. The interesting thing is those products off the shelves are generally diluted down to 99.3% water. Everyone LOVES that our products are guaranteed for a full 90 days, which gives you lasting results."

"Perfect. The ONLY reason I ask. . . Everyone has been giving us a shot because of all the work we are doing for them. If it makes sense for you, great! If it doesn't, no worries! At least you'll better know how pest control works."

The Eaves

"The first thing I need to take care of is up in the eaves. You know how everyone occasionally gets spiders and wasps up there? I know it's annoying for you when you have to get up there to whack them down so what I do is I come out with a webster pole, it's a 30-foot extendable brush. I sweep and treat all of your eaves, on both the first and second levels of your home. This is important because it obviously makes the house look nice, but it also prevents those colonies from creeping up into the attic through your vents and from eventually trickling down into the home."

Transition: "Next is the foundation of the home."

The Base

"You're smart to treat around the house, it's obviously to prevent bugs from getting into the home, right? Bugs just use these entry points as freeways in and out of the home so what I do for you that's a little different is I actually give you 6 feet of coverage, going 3 feet up and 3 feet out around the base of your home. That'd be like an entire bottle of Ortho in just a single treatment. Why this is important is I'm flushing those bugs out of the wall voids of your home so you don't see anything pop up on the inside."

Transition: "Lastly, _____ was doing it themselves too and the reason they gave us a shot is what we're doing for them out here in the yard."

The Yard

"This is really where all your bugs come from, right? Those colonies will continue to spread if I don't take care of it for you so what I do is I come out with a spreader and granulate your yard 10 to 15 feet around the entire perimeter of your home. The bugs think it is food, they'll take it down to their colony, and it'll spread like a virus at the source. Some of those colonies can nest up to 5 feet underground. Does that make sense how a liquid spray won't be as effective as the granule we're using?"

Transition: "The best part is the price..."

PRICING:

"As far as pricing goes, what's the square footage of your home?
Awesome, for a house your size it'd normally be $____ DOLLARS. After that, we just bill you monthly like a Netflix or Hulu subscription and that's cheap, it's just $____ BUCKS/month for our (package offered). Since you've never used a bug guy/girl before, I'd be happy to take $____ DOLLARS off that initial visit and do the whole thing for just $____ to prove myself to you. And that's for everything. Now, you're going to be here tomorrow, right?"

Agreement Script

CUSTOMER INFORMATION TAB:

First Name: "What was your first name?"

Last Name: "And last name?"

Spouse: "Perfect, is there anyone else you'd like to put on the account or will you be the one to handle the pest control?"

Phone 1: "What's a good phone number to put on the account?"

Email: "And a good email to send all of the information to?"

Address: "And we are on (street name), what was the house number here?"

Permanent Notes: Input anything additional you spoke about with the customer that helped add value. The service pros should read these notes for their initial appointment.

Reminders: "Now, we never want to show up unexpectedly for your recurring visits, we will always notify you before coming out for you. Do you prefer phone calls, texts, emails, or all of the above?"

SERVICE TAB:

While filling out the service tab, ask them some small talk questions to get to know them. Get them to open up on a personal level!

Service Plan: Input subscription

Initial Quote: Change the initial quote to the original pricing based on their square footage.

Discount: Input the discount you and the customer agreed upon.

Custom (Months): Change contract length to agreed-upon term.

Recurring Charge: Change monthly bill to agreed-upon amount.

PAY TAB:

Auto Pay: Make sure the tab is set to Auto Pay.

Payment: "Now as far as payment goes, you don't get billed until the service but we just need to get some form of payment on file for the service. Do you have that card with you?"

Payment: Input the card number, expiration, and CVV.

Billing Address: "And is the billing the same as the physical address?"

Leave all other tabs as is.

AGREE TAB:

Service Address: "Here's my office number, if you ever need a reservice I don't want you mad at us if you're seeing bugs, just give us a call, and let's get right back out here any time you need to take care of the bugs, alright?"

Customer Information: "Now could you just make sure I spelled all of your information correctly? Name look good? Phone? Email?"

Included Insects: "Here's a list of the pests we are including in your package. Like I mentioned we are including those (hot buttons) in your service as well."

Subscription: "Here's your billing schedule so like I said it'll just be the (initial $ amount) for that first one and then the (monthly $ amount) after that. The green tabs are the months you can expect us and those white tabs are the months where we will come out for reservicing literally whenever you need us."

Recurring Services: "We do have a little service charge so after everything is said and done it'll just be (monthly charge + service fee) per month."

Customer Acknowledgement: "Now, just to make sure we are on the same page with everything, like I said before, you understand we will be:

(1) "billing you monthly for your service"

(2) "and coming out (frequency)."

(3) "Obviously that means this isn't a one-time service, we will continue to come out (frequency) to service the home so those bugs don't return."

(4) "Then like I said I am including the interior for you guys whenever you would like it done, we won't leave you hanging if any bugs find a way to get in."

(5) "This box just restates that I am including those free reservices in your package if you ever need us in between treatments."

(6) "This tab just states that if you did have an emergency and needed to cancel the agreement early, I obviously discounted you pretty heavily on that initial treatment so I would just ask that you paid back a portion of that discount, which would be $249. After the (agreement length) is up, keep the savings and we will continue to service you as long as you would like to keep us!"

(7) "Then this last sentence just says that if for whatever reason you get behind on your payments we won't be able to service the home until that is up to date and the balance would obviously get sent to collections if it went unpaid for too long."

"Now if I could just have you type your initials here, here, and then your autograph here, I will get this sent over to you right now. Do you have your phone on you by chance? Awesome could you (1) pull that out or (2) go grab that for me real quick? I just need to make sure you receive this email before we come to service the home for you."

SeeMeSign: "Now, the last thing before I get out of your hair, honesty is important to RIDD so the company just has us go through this quick little automated video that will ask you a few of those questions I went over in that contract I emailed over to you just to make sure I didn't promise you anything crazy with your pest control."

STATUS TAB:

Schedule them at the time agreed upon with a technician who is available for that time slot!

REFERRALS:

Ask for referrals as you finish up the sale.

"Before I head out, do you have any family, friends, or neighbors nearby that you know of that wouldn't mind hearing me out as well? I'd love to give them the same discounted rates I gave you!"
